Contemporary Pre-Natal Classes Now Available in Edmonton

Edmonton...Families now have an alternative when it comes to pre-natal education-- Mommy Connections is launching a new pre-natal program to compliment its successful post-natal programs. Pre-natal programs are two hours a week for six weeks and feature speakers in nursing, physical therapy, as well as a doula. Classes are designed to explore current trends, issues and concerns that expectant parents have.

“More than 200 people have taken our post-natal classes since January,” says Carol McBee, Founder and President of Mommy Connections, “and I’ve heard time and time again how women wished for something similar while they were pregnant.”

“Our goal is to give expectant parents a ‘middle of the road’ approach without bias toward either ‘medicalized’ or ‘natural’ childbirth,” says Jen Kiesman, a Physical Therapist, and primary facilitator in the program.

The Pre-Natal program is meant not only to educate parents about the birthing process; but, it is also designed to connect parents and create a support network before the babies arrive. Speakers in the Pre-Natal classes will cover topics such as: coping with labour, reflexology and acupressure while pregnant and birthing, understanding the role of a doula, and issues around breastfeeding.

South Edmonton classes run from September 8 to October 13, and more locations are expected to begin soon. Registration is $168 (incl. GST) and is available online at www.mommyconnections.ca. The program is limited to 12 couples, and all registered couples receive a gift bag.

Mommy Connections was founded in October 2009 and now has seven locations in Alberta and Ontario. Licensing opportunities are currently available.
